MERCHANTS,

MERCHANTS,

Aud all others residing in the country, or in cities or country villacts, where they have access to even but a small plot of ground, see inversely in what follows:

It has been said that "we can learn something from every one." This is literally true. One's own experience is necessarily limited, his knowledge must be derived mainly from the experiences and practices of others, and it is the interest of every one to extend the range of observation as widely as possible.

Take the Farmer as an illustration. During his apprenticeship at home or elsewhere, he has learned to plow, to sow, to have vest, &c. Further observation of the customs and practices of his immediate neighbor had suggested improved modes of culture, and his labor has been rendered more profitable. Should ture, and his labor has been rendered more profitable. Should ture and his labor may be a standard more profitable. Should ture are, however, other modes by which he can secure many of the advantages to be derived from traveling. He may learn much from books and periodics a written by practical, its yellows the substance of these engaged in similar pursuits. For example, a single-lint in regard to the preservinor of seed which was published in The American Agracultarist in the Autumn of 154, increased the yield of a farmer's ten-acre field of wheat full five bushels per sore, in all more than 50 bushels. Here was a direct gain of over $70, at the price the wheat was sold. Another article in the same paper taught a mechanic to double the products of his garden without additional labor. Thousands are ready to point out how they have profited, some of them deachs and others hundreds of follows, from multitudes of practical articles monthly set before them.

Without further preliminary remarks, the Publisher would invite the attention of all classes of persons to some of the peculiar merits of this journal.

THE AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST,

(Now in its fifteenth volume:)

Ist. The Editor is himself a practical man, brought up to the labors of a large farm, embracing a varied culture, and now resides in the country. To these have been added the advantages of a therough study of the SciENCE of soil culture, were of practice in the analysis of soils, manures, &c., and extensive traveling for the purpose of observing the practice of cultivation in a wide range of locality.

2d. A large number of intelligent working men are constantly a miributing the results of their duily experience to the pages of

4th. The articles are written in a plain, familiae, instructive style, and adapted to the necessities of the great mass of cultivators. In this respect, as well as others, it is believed that The Agriculturial stands preminent.

5th. The articles in each number are prepared with direct reference to the farm and garden work of the month in which the control of the stands.

The liberal patronage of the public enables the publisher to entain a journal of this character, and still furnish it at the his tee price of ONE DOLLAR A YEAR.

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR.

In the price of ONE DOLLAR A YEAR.

To make The Agriculturiat EXCEL, by reason of the intrinsic value of its pages, is the aim and ambition of the Publisher and all connected with him.

A proof of the merit of The Agriculturiat is found in the fact that while the paper is never forced upon any one, but is promptly discontinued when the time expires for which it is ordered and pand for, and while the whole subscripton list expires annually, not one in a hundred of the old subscribers have lailed to renew during the present year.

The Publisher has been induced to thus set forth the claims of The Agriculturist at some length, from the belief that there are thousands of persons who NEED and DESIRE, just such a journal as this at least claims to be. He respectfully sake all interested to give it a year's trial and then judge for themselves of ils merits or demerits. The five hundred or more practical articles furnished every year cannot fall to repay at least one doller.

A few new amberchiers first received can be supplied with the issues for April and March; all other back numbers are exhausted by the recent great influx of new names. All business or other communications should be addressed to ORANGE JUDD Publisher and Proprietor.

Reynolds—in the series of great romances of which this is the last—fat excels any of his previous efforts. The gifted writer has availed hi neelf of a singular tradition of the Prussian royal family to weave a romance of the most entranding interest. The reader is hurried on with breathless haste from incident to incident, from the opening chapter to the sad catastrophe. The character of the heroine is chaimingly depicted, as are also those of the brave old Prussian colonel and his darting friends, who are rescued from impending ruin on account of their treasonable plots by the skill and heroism of the young lady.

This stirring tale has been immeasely popular in Eugland, and must meet with the same success in this country.

No published "Life," or "Memoir," of several of the eminent men whose biographies are contained herein, has ever before been given to the public. While, therefore, much ground has been gone over, the author hopes that this attempt to embody in a convenient form the leading events in the history of the Grant Lights or Mexiconism will not be unappreciated.
One object the author has bad in view—to make the work in iteresting and profitable. To accomplish this, variety was thought to be necessary, hence, the reader will find many interesting and instructive ancedotes interspersed through its pages, and what is perhaps of more importance, he will learn something of the self-demal practiced, and the sacrifices made, by the leading ministers of the Methodist Church in Europe and

Of some curious hand, from eight Fiery atoms may be burning
That would fill the world with light."

[Alice Carey.]

This beld and original work will create a semantion in the literary world. The American Publishers' Gazette, in an editorial a few weeks ago, noticing the ill success which for the past few months has attended the publication of a class of works known as "Domestic Tsies," and which were formerly read with such awdity, expresses itself as follows in view of the exhaustion of this once popular theme: "What shall we have next! Shall it be biography, history, poetry or essays! Or will some brilliant genius among the authors strike out a new path "Here is something new, and we confidently predict that by its exiking merits it will inaugurate a new era in American literature.

OLD VIRGINIA.-The elegantly-written His-O torical Remance, entitled
THE YOUTH OF THE OLD DOMINION,
Is now completed and ready for sale. No one can read this most graphic recture of the early days of Virginia, we thout feel ing that Cast John Smith, and his party were made of stern singly and also that the Sons and Daughters of the Forest with whom they care in contact, among whom were POWHA-TAN, POCAHONTAS, OPICHANCANOUGH, and many oth-TAN, POCAHONTAS, OPICHANCANOUGH, and many others of great celebrity, were no mean representatives of the Red Man. To the student of early history the early days of the Irant Republic will ever be days of marked intorest; and when to the simple details of historical facts, are added the flowing drapery with which the elegant and clustic diction of Mr. Hopkins has invested them, history becomes as fascinating as the most brilliant romance.
